

the battle wounds of my own foolishness. In fact, it isn't even the first battle wound I've displayed to the world.

Black eyes heal, lessons are learned, and hopefully new plans are put into effect to prevent future foolishness. Physical mistakes are often remedied with the passage of time. Unfortunately, physical mistakes are not the only type of battle wounds.

Were you to retrace my steps, you would find broken friendships... the result of my anger, intolerance, and breaches of trust. You might find the carnage that resulted from outbursts of anger, or harbored grudges. You would find those who were still hungry because I looked another direction. You would find tears in the eyes of others because of my bitterness, and broken hearts due to my neglect. I have other battle wounds, and I have inflicted still more.

In Scripture we are cautioned about so many things. Words rashly spoken, abandonment of others, greed, sexual impurity, and bitterness. We may feel we have escaped the wounds of such things, but the black eyes might be on others.

Children, friends, colleagues, and spouses often are injured by our failures as we glibly pass through life announcing to the world that "it didn't really affect anyone else."

Therapy sessions, counseling offices and tearful tables over cups of coffee are testimony to the black eyes of our sin. Let's learn to do better.

I enjoy the quiet focus of reloading ammunition cases. There is something very peaceful, calming and focused about it, in addition to being able to create some exactness that only matters to people who target shoot. While the process is done with gun powder, primers, and projectiles, it is reasonably safe provided one controls their environment and distractions. For that reason, I reload over in the shop in the loft, away from others.

Unfortunately I made a mistake on some rounds and needed to correct it. After weighing some cartridges, I determined I might have over charged some loads. I use an inertia bullet puller to take the cartridge apart, and it failed, striking me above the right eye.

In life our mistakes are often apparent to others, as you notice in the photo I've included here today. A little sign for me to wear announcing to the world that I am imperfect. I'm certainly not the first one to wear

OUR SYMPATHY

We extend our sympathy to Ned Marks and his family on the passing of his mother, Margaret Marks, last week in Wichita. Her funeral was in Dodge City yesterday.

Many of you knew Roy Risley – he passed away on Feb 19th in Hutchinson. His funeral service is planned for Tuesday at 10am at the Eastwood Church of Christ in Hutchinson, with burial following in the Fairview Park Cemetery in St John.

NEWS FROM MEXICO

A letter received this week from Ubaldo Cardona in Parral, Chihuahua is posted for you to read. They are having a cold winter, but it has not kept them from being busy. They are planning a campaign in early April and ask for our prayers for their continued work.
